HUE/COLOR

Property of colours is shown which is determined by the dominant wavelength of light. The primary colours red, green and blue colours determine the wavelength. All three wavelengths at full strength give pure white. The absence of all three colours produces complete black.

SATURATION

Saturation is the intensity and chroma. It refers to the dominance of hue in colours. It is also referred to as chroma, richness and purity.

VALUE/ LEVEL

Value is the relative lightness and darkness of a colour. Values are a relevant part of hues which describes the overall strength and intensity of light.

COLOR SYSTEMS IN REAL LIFE APPLICATIONS

CMYK

CMYK stands for Cyan, Magenta, Yellow, and Key (Black). Light on a screen is different from ink on the page. Cyan, magenta, and yellow are subtractive colours. The purpose of the CMYK colour model derives from the inefficient use of the RGB colour model in printing.

RGB

This system uses Red, Green & Blue colour codes. These colours represented on a screen are a combination of these three primary colours. Any colour that you see on a screen is actually a certain percentage of red, green, and blue lights. This system is a go-to reference for digital displays.

PENTONE

PCS or Pantone Color System is a standardized colour matching system. It is widely used all across the globe. It helps printers and designers specify and control colours for printing projects. With this, you can specify colours that cannot be mixed in traditional

RAL

The RAL colour chart is a system that was designed in Germany by the German State Commission for the Delivery Terms and Quality Assurance! The RAL colour chart is an important system used for a variety of different purposes, from painting to varnishing, and even powder coating.
